TOPIC

TRANSFORMATION AND CHANGE: EUROPE AND BEYOND

The only consistency of today's world is change. Current processes of transformation are frequently perceived as unexpected and unpredictable. They are often triggered by the quest of individuals and groups for self-determination, their need for cultural reassessment, or by more mundane motives of globalized business and politics. Whatever their cause, it is clear to all that contemporary societies are facing many challenges in their constant transformation.

Demographic change in Europe and America has become one of the key challenges and policy issues of our time. An ageing population, low birth rates, and changing family structures have had an enormous impact on intergenerational relationships, the job market, and systems of social care, but also on an individual's definition of identity over the life course.

At the same time, there are "others": migrants who are trying to find their place in these societies. Nation building processes and ever-deeper forms of economic and political integration retrace and dilute borders, again with an unprecedented impact on the individual as well as the collective.

The summer school will offer the possibility of examining current debates on transformation and demography in Europe and beyond by focusing on the current challenges to established forms of government, welfare policies and modes of transformation in a radically changed global world, where migration and transnationalism play an important role. Focusing on the emphasis areas of the University of Graz – South Eastern Europe and North, Central, and South America – the summer school will provide a basis for an interdisciplinary analysis in terms of opportunities provided and challenges faced in the past, present and future.
